Shhh… our dragon is in Brumation!

That’s why our bearded dragon isn’t at school right now.

What is brumation?

Brumation is a long, deep rest that reptiles take when it gets cooler and the days get shorter. It’s like hibernation, but for reptiles. It is normal and healthy!

Why is it happening now?

Shorter Days

Fall means less daylight. Our dragon’s body notices and gets sleepy.

Cooler Weather

Reptiles are cold-blooded. They get their heat from outside, not inside.

Slow Motion

Heartbeat and digestion slow way down to save energy until spring-like conditions return.

What it looks like

- ✔ Sleeping a LOT, sometimes for days
- ✔ Hiding or burrowing in a cozy spot
- ✔ Eating little or nothing
- ✔ Moving slowly, less interested in visitors
- ✔ Pooping much less often

Why not at school?

- ★ Brumating dragons need a quiet, dim, calm place
- ★ Bells, noise, and bright lights can wake them up
- ★ Being handled or moved is stressful right now
- ★ Resting at a steady, cooler temperature keeps them safe

Don’t worry — our dragon is okay!

Wild bearded dragons from Australia do this every year. Our dragon is being cared for and checked on, and will always have fresh water. If a pet ever loses weight or seems sick, a reptile vet can help.

When will they be back?

Brumation usually lasts a few weeks to a few months. We’ll see our dragon again around: _____
